This issue of Senri Ethnological Studies has resulted from the Thirteenth International Symposium of the Division of Ethnology of the Taniguchi Foundation on the theme: "Unity and Diversity of a People : The Search for Fulbe Identity." The symposium was held at the National Museum of Ethnology between September 3 and 10, 1989. All the participants are deeply grateful to the Taniguchi Foundation and its Executive Director, Toyosaburo Taniguchi, for their generosity in making the symposium possible and for meeting all expenses of the participants, both from abroad and within Japan. The symposium showed how important it is to bring people together and find a common language in pursuing research interests.

The topic of the symposium developed out of the work of the research experience of scholars who have long worked on the Fulbe in different parts of Africa: sociologists, anthropologists, oral literature specialists, and linguists. The symposium provided them with a unique opportunity to share their knowledge and experience, focussing on their common interests.

The success of the symposium was the result of the efforts of many people. In particular we would like to thank the Director-General of the National Museum of Ethnology, Tadao Umesao, Chairman of the Organizing Committee, and its members: Takuji Takemura, Komei Sasaki, Hisatsugu Sugimoto, Hiroyasu Tomoeda, Tomoaki Fujii, and Takeo Tanaka. We would also like to thank the members of the Executive Committee: Tetsuo Sakurai, Shingo Einoo, Shuzo Ishimori, Shiro Sasaki, Hiroshi Shoji, Toshio Asakura, Yasunori Yamamoto, and Eiji Okude of the Museum, Eiko Yuasa, Executive Director of the Senri Foundation, and Hidejiro Uji, its Business Manager.

We would also like to extend our special thanks to Catherine VerEecke for invaluable editorial help in preparing this issue, without which this enterprise would not have been possible.

We hope the results as shown in this selection will be of value to all those interested in Fulbe studies, and will promote further research on the topic in the future.
