Acknowledgements

This volume is the first English publication on the anthropology of Europe carried out by Japanese scholars. It is my hope that this publication will trigger a wide-ranging correspondence among researchers in relevant fields, and will widen the scope of anthropological studies of Europe. I would like to express my sincere appreciation to the National Museum of Ethnology for its generous financial support. I am also deeply grateful to Stephanie Oeben, who carefully read the volume for style and suggested revisions to the papers prepared by non-native speakers of English, while editing her own dissertation on virtual communities in Europe and Japan.
