This issue of Senri Ethnological Studies presents a compilation of findings from field research which was conducted between the fiscal year of 1990 and 1992 with a grant of International Research Program by the Ministry of Education, Science and Culture. The title of the research project is "Cultural Adaptation and Strategies on the Use and Management of Coastal Marine Resources in Tropical Asia and the southwestern Pacific" (#02041102) headed by T. Akimichi of the National Museum of Ethnology.

For the realization of the research in Malaysia, Indonesia, Papua New Guinea and Solomon Islands, we are most grateful to those who were concerned with the research permit, joint research, local arrangements, and various assistants in the fields.

In Malaysia, we are very much obliged to Ms. Rabihah Mahmood, Head of Planning and Fisheries, Department of Fisheries and other staff of the Department for their kind advice and recommendation.

In Indonesia, we are most grateful to Professor A. B. Lapian, Head of Maritime Group in PMB/LIPI and Professor E. K. M. Masinambow, Deputy Chairman of PMB/LIPI for their kind guidance and assistance for the research. We are also grateful to the staff of Maritime Group of PMB/LIPI, and those in the Fisheries Department of Sam Raturangi University.

In Papua New Guinea, thanks are given to Dr. Jacob Simet, Head of the Institute of Papua New Guinea Studies for his assistance. Also, we are indebted to Professor T. Matsuoka, Department of Fisheries of the University of Papua New Guinea and Mr. S. Yasuda for their support to our research.

In the Solomon Islands, we are very much obliged to Mr. P. Allan, Minister of Natural Resources, Mr. S. Shimura, a JICA expert of Fisheries Division of Ministry of Natural Resources, Mr. S. Diake, a Principal Fisheries Officer, Mr. T. Watanabe, a Coordinator of JICA, and Mr. Y. Nishimura, a JOCV staff on Malaita for their assistance and supports.

Lastly, we are greatly indebted to the people in the villages who warmly accepted us during our stay. Without their understanding and assistance, it could not be possible to complete our work. This book is dedicated to those who live as coastal foragers in the Asia-Pacific region.

A List of Contributors

Tomoya AKIMICHI is a professor at the National Museum of Ethnology. He is a maritime anthropologist with particular interest in marine resource management in small-scale fisheries, traditional navigation, and maritime history in the Asia-Pacific region. He has conducted field research in Japan, Solomon Islands, Papua New Guinea, and Indonesia. His publications include Ayu-fish and the Japanese, Ethnography of Encounters with Whales and Dolphins, Territoriality in Japanese Culture History, and Maritime People of the Pacific: An Anthropological Study.

Akira GOTO is a professor at Miyagi Women's College. He is an ethno-archaeologist and his particular interest is culture history in Oceania. He has obtained Ph. D. in the University of Hawaii, and has conducted research in Polynesia (Hawaii), the Solomon Islands, Malaysia and Indonesia. He has published many articles in the field of traditional fishing in Japan and the Asia-Pacific region.

Daisuke TAKEKAWA is a research scholar at the National Museum of Ethnology. He is an ecological anthropologist, and he has conducted field research in Okinawa, Solomon Islands, and Malaysia. His interest is maritime folk culture in the coral environments.

Masataka TAWA is an associate professor at the Kwansai Gakuin University. He is a fisheries geographer, and he has conducted fieldwork in Japan as well as Philippines, Malaysia and Papua New Guinea. His particular interest is the analysis of space-use by small-scale fishermen. His recent publication is Papuan Fishermen in Transition.

Kazuhiro SUDA is a lecturer at the Hokkai Gakuen University. He is an ecological anthropologist, and he has conducted field research in sago-eating communities in Papua New Guinea, fishing communities in Malaysia and Japan. His interest is time allocation and socioecology of the people.

Dedi A. SUPRIADI is a researcher of the Indonesian Institute of Science (LIPI) in Jakarta, Indonesia. He has conducted field research in Kai Islands, Tidore, Ambon in eastern Indonesia. His particular interest is the social organization in fishing communities. He has also conducted joint research with T. Akimichi in Bajo fishing communities in Kayoa. He has joint publications on maritime cultures in eastern Indonesia from LIPI.

Eddy MANTJORO is a professor at the Sam Raturangi University in Manado,

Indonesia. He is a fisheries economist and has conducted extensive field research in fishing communities in north Sulawesi. Also, he is interested in modern Japanese fisheries. He has conducted joint research in the Sangihe Islands with T. Akimichi. He has many articles on fisheries economy.

Yukio KUCHIKURA is a professor at the Gifu University. He is an ecological anthropologist. He has conducted field research in the Orang Asli hunter-gatherers in Malaysia. He has also done field research in fishing communities in Okinawa and Tokara Islands in Japan. He has many articles on ecological studies focussed on food consumption, energy expenditure and activity system.
