Acknowledgements

We thank the organisers of the 19th Congress of the Indo-Pacific Prehistory Association for allowing Addison and Spriggs to hold the session on irrigated taro in Hanoi, and thank all who participated in what was a well-attended and lively discussion. Spriggs would like to thank the College of Arts and Social Sciences at The Australian National University for supporting his attendance at the Congress. Attendance by Matthews was supported by the RIHN project H-02, 'Agriculture and Environment Interactions in Eurasia: Past, Present and Future' (Research Institute for Humanity and Nature, Kyoto, Japan).

All papers in the volume were internationally refereed by at least two scholars and we thank them all for undertaking this sometimes-onerous task. Apart from contributors to the volume, the referees included Jane Allen, Chris Ballard, Andrew Clarke, Tim Denham, Mark Donohue, Julie Field, Jack Golson, Sabine Hess, Pat Kirch, Thegn Ladefoged, Vincent Lebot, Patrick Nunn, Andy Pawley, Jon Peterson, David Roe, Barry Rolett, Peter Sheppard, Jim Specht, and Marshall Weisler.

Very sadly, our contributor Robert Bollt passed away soon after the Congress. We were extremely honoured to be able to complete his paper from the draft he presented, and include it here as a memorial to his work. Oana Bollt is thanked for permission to include her late husband's paper in the volume. Barry Rolett is especially thanked for his careful editorial attention to the paper. For permission to publish the translation of Walter and Tzerikiantz's paper we thank the publisher, IRD Éditions, France. The editors are also grateful to the National Museum of the Ethnology, Osaka, for reviewing and publishing this collection. For superb practical support, we thank our book production team of J. Koguchi (coordination, National Museum of Ethnology), J. Martin and E. Humphrey (copyediting, USA), M. Smith (proof-reading, Japan), R. Benton (reference checking, NZ), E. Tabuchi (map-making, National Museum of Ethnology), and M. Coe (indexing, Australia).
